

Scottish Families Affected by Alcohol and Drugs is a national charity. We support anyone in Scotland who is concerned about someone else's alcohol or drug use. By 'family' we mean all relatives, friends, neighbours, colleagues, or any other 'concerned significant others'. This includes siblings, adult children, partners, parents, grandparents, formal and informal kinship carers, friends and others.

We provide a range of national services from our base in Glasgow.

Our bereavement support service is for anyone who is bereaved through drugs and/or alcohol. The service gives listening support and advice and also offers the opportunity to speak to a professional counsellor in your local area.

This service is free and available across Scotland.

How can I contact the service?

We can refer you to the service if you contact our helpline 08080 10 10 11, email helpline@sfad.org.uk or use the webchat on our website. If you would like to use the service, the adviser will take your name, location, and phone number to pass it onto our team. We ask for your location so that we can find a counsellor closest to you. You can also let us know if there is a specific day or time you would like us to call. Our team will contact you within five working days to talk about our service and answer any of your questions. If you are happy to go ahead, we will find a counsellor near you who will contact you and arrange a suitable time, date and venue for your sessions.

What happens?

The sessions last around 50 minutes and the counsellor will give you time to talk and offer support. We usually offer six sessions but everyone is different, so if you and the counsellor agree that you would like more, we can arrange this. If your sessions have ended and you feel you still need support, this could be a few days, months or years later, you can contact us again to use the service.

What areas are covered by this service?

Anybody who is a resident in Scotland and over the age of 16 is eligible for our bereavement service. We have a network of counsellors across Scotland.

Will this be confidential?

Yes. We will not share your details with other organisations, only your allocated counsellor.

What if I can't make a session?

If you are unable to attend your session, please give your counsellor at least 24 hours notice so that it can be rescheduled. If you miss a session without notice, this will count as one of your sessions.

‘I had tried for so long to come to terms with the loss of my husband. I was apprehensive of getting counselling as I didn't like to talk about it but I knew something had to change. From the first call to Scottish Families everything seemed so easy and within a week I had my first counselling appointment booked.’

‘It's been 13 months since I had my counselling and my life is back on track.’
